4 How does personal branding differ from self-promotion, and why is this distinction important?

– Personal branding is a holistic, long-term strategy that shapes your authentic identity, emphasizing values and contributions. It's about building trust, credibility, and meaningful connections over time. On the other hand, self-promotion is often more immediate and transactional, focusing on specific achievements without a broader context. Personal branding contributes to long-term success, while self-promotion may be short-lived and task-specific. The distinction matters for ethical considerations, relationship building, and sustaining a positive presence.
